

Ian

From: maureen.erskine [maureen.erskine@virgin.net]

Sent: 30 September 2004 17:18

To: info

Subject: Culture in Scotland[Scanned]

In a democracy it is reasonable that minorities will have an honourable place; not just minorities that we like, but minorities that we don't like, don't understand, wish to have nothing to do with.

So when we discover that there are people who like opera, who think that formal dress indicates respect for the composer, who do not want to be harangued by Nigel Kennedy between movements we must accept it and make provision accordingly.

After all they may, for all we know, pay taxes, keep the law, eat five a day and in all other respects be just like us.